--Differences between any two versions in a genealogy can be calculated at any time. The difference between two subsequent versions represents what was changed on the first version to create the second version. Calculated differences are a vast improvement over manually maintained change logs. Manual logs double users' entry effort by requesting them to both make and describe changes. Calculated differences are guaranteed accurate and do not require double entry effort from users.--

Please also replace the paragraph beginning at page 14, line 4, with the following rewritten paragraph:

A2

--A more thorough understanding of the method of the present invention may be obtained by now referring to Figure 1, where there is shown a genealogy of a change package 101 using the ODBMS, generally designated 100, and method of the present invention.--
